Methodology: Data was gathered through offline feedback form distributed among teachers. These surveys were structured to capture quantitative feedback on various facets of their experiences, including teaching workload, access to professional development opportunities, and the level of support from the administration. Respondents were randomly selected from the faculty database, yielding a response rate of approximately 94%.

Key Findings:

Teaching Workload: The majority of teachers reported satisfaction with their teaching workload.

Professional Development Opportunities: The institution received praise for its provision of professional development opportunities, with many teachers expressing appreciation. However, some suggested an increase in training sessions and workshops to ensure alignment with current teaching methodologies and technologies.

Support from Administration: Overall, teachers rated the level of support from the administration positively.

Infrastructure:

Teachers generally expressed satisfaction with the institution's infrastructure facilities, including the library, laboratories, and classrooms.

Compensation and Benefits: The compensation and benefits package received favorable ratings from teachers. However, there were suggestions to consider revising the salary structure to provide more incentives for performance and recognize seniority.

Nonetheless, there are areas for improvement, such as staying abreast of the latest teaching methodologies and technologies, enhancing student engagement, and reevaluating the salary structure.
